Player Description:
Jorthy Mokio is a left footed 18 year old 1.82m ball winning defensive midfielder. He is physically strong despite having a small build and has good quickness and acceleration speed which he uses to get in position to press the ball carrier. Despite his height, he has strong jumping power to win aerial duels and defend long balls. He is also a strong dribbler, with explosive legs that can help him move up the field quickly and get himself out of trouble. He does need to work on his pass progression, as he needs to extend his passing range to be a more effective pass progressor as his through passes do not tend to be accurate but he can play short and quick passes. In addition, he needs to improve his movement to receive as he can be caught standing still at times not keeping up the intensity and opening up passing lanes for his teammates, which limits his effectiveness as a DM in possession. His ball retention is also notably impressive, as he makes great decisions on making a quick pass out of trouble or a quick dribble. Overall, Jorthy is a very interesting prospect who could play in a backup role at Newcastle but needs further development to round out his passing and his movement to receive. I do think he would be an average fit due to his lack of pass progression, and since he just signed a contract with Ajax in April, making a move for him is unrealistic at this moment. I recommend to follow up soon as he remains an interesting player with a strong physical frame to grow into and a big development potential to become a Newcastle first team player.
